Course Description: Faculty will engage in a first-year faculty experience that is designed to ease the transition to working at LCCC. The cohort will meet in person and complete activities online to discover the culture of LCCC, explore instructional strategies, examine the curriculum, and reflect on classroom experiences. All members will benefit from the exchange of expertise within the cohort as well as with current LCCC faculty and staff. Through the first-year faculty experience, cohort members will develop proficiency in the four domains that capture the scope and identity of faculty practice at LCCC. The four domains are defined as:

- Teaching and Learning - the pursuit of transforming our students' lives through the power of inspired learning
- Outcomes-based Design and Assessment – an education model designed to assess outcomes to gather data on student learning; the data is subsequently used to engage with colleagues in the course, program, and institutional level assessment of student learning with the aim of continuous improvement.
- Professionalism and Reflection – serving the institution, collaborating and actively reflecting on life and work responsibilities, contributing to the greater community and discipline
- Diversity and Inclusion – the mindset and practice of intentionally acknowledging multiple perspectives and engaging the diversity of learners in the classroom toward educational, social, moral, and democratic ends.
